

500 IN PANIC AS SOUND STEAMER SINKS SCHOONER

Passengers on Neptune Liner Tennessee Hunt Ten Minutes for Life-Preservers Found Stowed in Hold.

Four lives were lost, and 500 passengers on the big Sound steamer Tennessee, running for the Neptune line from Boston to this city, were thrown into a panic at 3 o'clock this morning, when she collided with a 240-ton schooner seven miles off Bridgeport.

The schooner, Myronus, a three-masted craft, laden with granite, sank within two minutes after the crash, four of her crew of six going down with the shattered hulk. A great hole was stove in the bow of the Tennessee above the water line, her pilot house was smashed, and her engines crippled, so that all of her passengers had to be transferred to the steamer Maine, of the Bridgeport line.

The serious charge is made that there were no preservers available on the Tennessee. Men, women and children, hundreds of them clad only in nightgowns and pajamas, raced frantically about the decks hunting for the life belts. Ten minutes after the collision they were discovered, packed in bales in the hold.

According to many of the passengers on the big steamer the crew displayed no discipline whatever, and the only two persons rescued from the sunken schooner were pulled out of the water by passengers and held up until other passengers, aided only by a colored porter, lowered a boat.

Capt. W. C. Billety, of the schooner Myronus, said when he arrived in this city on the Maine that the collision was entirely the fault of the water man on the Tennessee. He declares that there was a thick haze, but not a dense fog. He was barely making progress before a one-knot breeze taking across the course of the Tennessee and bound in the same direction.

Schooner's Captain Talks. "I was heavily laden with granite blocks," he said, "that I had shipped at Mount Desert. Me, my course was due southeast on the port tack, when I made out the lights of the Tennessee. Both my side lights were burning brightly and I blew my fog horn constantly.

"That the man at the wheel saw me I am positive, for he altered his course. But he shifted his helm to the wrong side and bore down upon me under half speed. I was on deck when the schooner struck us about the port beam, and cut through the deck as if she were ploughing a chunk of cheese. Just as she struck I saw the mate, Austin Riley, climbing to the rigging. He was above me in the mizen sheets when we began to sink. I did not see anything of George Smythe, the cook, and the other two men who were drowned.

"When I felt the Myronus going down below me like a sinker I jumped from the rigging into the water, shouting for help. I was rescued by a passenger, George Smythe, the cook, and the other two men who were drowned.

Petty Officer Saved Captain. The skipper of the sunken schooner was rescued by Michael F. Cross, a petty officer on the battleship New Jersey on his way from Boston to this city. He heard the shout of the captain and saw him leap from the rigging into the water. Cross had been sleeping in the cabin and had his shoes and all his clothes on when he took a header over
